

She doesn't know what to do next because all the plans she made didn't work out. The weather was so bad that they couldn't go to the park as they planned. Jhon was also supposed to call her at 3:00, but he forgot. Now, they were both upset about the whole thing. She tried calling him several times; however, he didn't pick up, so she left a message saying she was upset. Later, she went to the store but didn't find what she was looking for. She thought maybe she should just stay home and relax, but she didn't have the energy. Her friends told her everything would be fine, but she wasn't sure. She knew that it was just one of those days when nothing goes right, and she wasn't even sure if she wanted to keep trying or just go to bed early and forget the day even happened.

As she walked home, it started raining, and her umbrella broke, so she got entirely wet. Her hair was a mess, and she was feeling even more frustrated due to what happened. She decided to stop for coffee, but when she got there, the line was so long that she almost gave up. She thought, 'Why does everything have to be so hard today?' When she finally got her drink, the barista made it wrongly, and she couldn't believe it. At that point, she was ready to just throw in the towel and call it a day. Maybe tomorrow will be better, she thought, but right now, it was hard to imagine things turning

She walked slowly back outside, holding her coffee cup that didn't even taste right, but she sipped it anyway as she was too tired to complain. Her shoes were soaked now and every step made that squishy sound she hated. She passed by a couple laughing under a big umbrella and felt a sting in her chest. "Must be nice," she mumbled, pulling her hoodie tighter. Her phone buzzed in her pocket but she ignored it. Probably just a notification or someone she didn't feel like talking to.

By the time she got back to her apartment, she was cold, wet, and just done with the whole day. The key stuck in the lock for a second, and she almost cried right there on the doorstep. Inside, she dropped everything on the floor and flopped on the couch without even taking off her coat. She stared at the ceiling, wondering how a day could go so wrong.